A Chinese Marriage.

Charles Jameson, a native of China, but educated in San Francisco, has been married in that city to a girl named Ah Quy, which is said to be the first marriage, according to the Chiness rites, that has taken place in that oity. The marriage took place in two rooms that the groom had selected for his future home, and supplied with Chinese and American furniture, and decorated with large strips of red paper, on which were stamped Chinese proverbs relating to marriage and married life. On a table in the first room were lacquered trays containing Chinese dried fruits and sweetmeats, while on others were tiny cups for tea. There were also on the table Chinese ornaments and sever-al water pipes. At apout 5 o'clock her female chaperones conducted the girl in their charge to the rooms of her future husband; but before she crossed the threshold of the door they threw a heavy handkerchief over her head and shut out everything from her sight. This, they told her, was to warn her that in entering the married state she was groping in the dark future; but that, placing implicit faith in the husband and relying upon him t guide her, she need not fear of makin a misstep. She was then conducted to th first room and then to the room adjoining where she met the man who was to becom her husband. He was standing by a bed i the room, and as she approached the handker chief was removed from her head and both sa-on the edge of the bed. In sitting down he intentionally sat on a portion of the long silken skirt she wore. She made no attempt to remove the garment, and by allowing him to remain seated on it gave proof that she was his captive and willing to submit to his orders .-Had she, however, draws the garment toward her it would have been proof that she would not be submissive, and would not obey him un-less she felt inclined to do so. The pair theu knelt before a small altar, from which hung ancestral tablets, and each offered a prayer, after which they went into the other room,

One of the chaperones poured ten into two of the cups and offered these to the groom and bride, telling each to take a sip. This being lone they took the cups again, mixed the contents, and, returning them to the pair, sold them to drink, saying that as their lips had toughed the beverage they would draw inspiration from each other by partaking of the mix ture. The bride, accompanied by the chape rones, followed by the groom and some relatives formed a procession and left the house, amid the explosion of firecrackers, and marched through Stout's alley to the restaurant on Jackson street, where the guests had assembled and were wait ing on the third floor. As the party ascended the stairs an orchestra played an air which a stretch of immagination might construs into wedding merch. As the bride entered the room where the guests were assembled she was supported by the two chaperones, and had her face hid from view by a large fan. Sho was then led around to each of the guests, and as she approached she courtesayed three times. The guests returned the courtesy and then re cited a proverb, to which the bride replied. After having gone through this ordeal !!! times, there being that number of guests pres ent, the party sat down to a banquet gotten up in the highest style of Chinese outloery art. This completed the marriage, but the groom said that after seven days, during which the festivities were to be continued, they would an before a justice of the peace and be married in American fashion. The bride was dressed in a dark silk dress, which touched the floor and hid her feet from view. On her arms were heavy gold brecelets, and on the figger of her left hand two gold riogs. Her raven black hair was pomaded and dressed with artificial firmers and gold coins. Presents had been made to the pair by 111 persons, all of whom were present at the barquet. A WOMAN'S ADVENTURE WITH A RATTLE SNAKE.-George Case, a constable of I.--, rocently was away from the house at work on a farm, and the mother had stepped out of the house for a snort time, leaving a little girl of eighteen months alone. Hearing thochild laughing in great apparent glee, she looked in and was horrifled to see it striking at a large massaugua, or marsh rattlesnake, and, when it would make a lunge to bite, the child would laugh, supposing it play. A pet cat was between the child and the enake, using all its strength, by rubbing against it, to keep it out of danger.

It is the opinion of the parents that they are indebted to the cat for their child's life. In this case the mother seized the child and placed it is the middle of the highest bed in the nouse; then she, all unmindful that she had laid of her shoes, seized a kettle of hot water and commen shoes, seized a kettle of hot water and commen-ced pouring it upon the snake.

This brave little barefoot woman, near enough to a four foot rattlesnake to pour hot water on him, poured it on until he made a lunge to bite, when she screamed, dropped the kettle, and ran. By this time Mr. C., who had been called, got to the house. By tearing up the floor he succeed ed in pushing the snake out with a pitch fork His skaneship was found in a very demoralized condition, being half cooked and entirely blinded by the hot water, trying to bite with a mouth all knocked askew by the falling kettle. After he was dispatched and the ratiles secured they were found to number seventeen, and some of them gone at that, showing him to be old enough
